The Lamp

FAR away from the human world, situated somewhere in the vast atmosphere of outer space with the clouds for its hills, there exists the mysterious country of Muteland. It was here that Loo Bird happened to stray one day while in a very dejected mood. Loo Bird, who is Lasell's conscience, was desperately in need of a mascot to bring home to the College. When he spied Mute, he chirped a sigh of relief, for he was sure that at last he had found the perfect mascot for Lasell. As it happens, however, Mute is a very particular little creature, so that when he hesitated a little about going to school, Loo Bird said, "But the only way you will ever find out how wonderful Lasell is will be to spend a year there for yourself." In the following pages you will watch Mute as he (we say "he" although in reality he has no gender) lives his life at our favorite junior college.

Dedicated to

We, the class of 1953, dedicate our yearbook to Mrs. Butler, and we think she deserves the honor in many ways. Besides her untiring work with the Art Department here at Lasell, Mrs. Butler has given up much of her free time during the school year to directing the yearbook staff. Her patience and sense of humor have helped us over many rough spots that are always to be encountered on the road to a successful publication. Words seem to be inadequate in expressing our gratitude, and we just say, "Thanks 'Mrs. B.' from the bottom of our hearts. We never could have done it without you."

Mute was a little timid about appearing before the deans and advisors. His knees shook and he had butterflies in his stomach; but after he had met and talked with them, he wondered what he had ever been so worried about. They were so understanding and so willing to help him that he felt right at home at once, even if he was the only Mute at Lasell. For the rest of the year he was the deans' best customer.

Speech and Dramatics Department

Mute was completely dumbfounded when it came time for him to make out his schedule. He couldn't decide what field to major in, so he did the next best thing and took one course from each of them.

Mute was enthusiastic about the physical education facilities at Lasell. He got as excited about his team (which one we won't mention out of fairness) as any of the girls. He and Loo Bird were at their best in hockey, where Loo Bird used to perch atop Mute's stick and pinch the girls on the opposing team until Mute could get through to score. Miss Watson never said anything, though, because she didn't know whether or not this could be considered a "fowl!"

Foods lab was another interesting adventure. Mute tried his hand at cooking, but was not too successful. However, he certainly enjoyed sampling what the girls had cooked.

Mute got along well enough with most of his instructors, especially in French and Spanish. You see, in Muteland there are Mutes of every nationality and race and one had to know how to talk to them, so languages really were Mute's specialty. But when it came to math and science—that was a different story! Mute had never even seen or heard of numbers before he came to Lasell, which made things a little difficult. Between Loo Bird and the instructors, he pushed along after a fashion, but since he didn't know what it meant to have a zero average, it didn't much matter anyway.

Art Department

Mute didn't understand very much of what he studied, but then he liked the instructors better than the subjects, anyway. Sympathetic and anxious to help, the staff at Lasell he found gave each and every girl an incentive to do her work and do it well.

Mute's art course was one of his favorites. Even though he didn't care much for dabbling in paint, he always enjoyed the times when the pretty girls got up on the platform and posed like statues, while he played tic-tac-toe on his drawing board and dreamed.

In secretarial and music classes, Mute had his troubles. His little hands never seemed to hit the right keys, whether on a typewriter or a piano.

English Department

One of the first events of Mute's year was the faculty-student reception in Winslow Hall. Mute couldn't get over the friendly attitude that prevailed between instructors and students as he moved along the receiving line. When he met President Wass he was tremendously impressed by his gentlemanly friendliness and warmth toward his students. Mute said to himself, "Here is a lucky man indeed to have the respect and affection that he obviously receives from all his student body."

Mute also took great delight in the various open houses given by the seniors to welcome their freshmen friends and faculty to their college residences.

When Mute met the senior class officers, he well understood why they had been elected to do their various jobs. They could all be counted on for sympathy, enthusiasm, and understanding when and where most needed. And he became really very deeply indebted to Miss Watt, the class advisor, because she became, to him as to all the girls in the class, a personal friend as well as an instructor. No one will ever forget Miss Watt's cheerful grin, which always managed to show through the grimmest problems.

Besides the fun and excitement of the first few days before classes, there were jobs to be done. One of these was to buy all of one's books in time for the first lesson.

Walking Around Campus

As Mute walked around the Lasell Campus, he sensed at once the strong feeling of tradition that every Lasell girl comes to know when, for instance, she sights Bragdon Hall on the hill. All Lasell girls know that feeling in the pit of the heart when they see their beloved campus, whether it be blanketed in snow as only a New England Winter can do it, or budding and blossoming in the beauty of the Spring.

Publications

Of all the organizations at Lasell, it might be said that the student publications give the most enjoyment throughout the year. There isn't a girl on campus who doesn't pour over the bi-weekly edition of The LASSELL NEWS to learn all the latest gossip and current goings-on around the College. Mute was delighted when he made the "Campus Carousel."

And three times each year THE QUILL presents the best in student creative writing, and proud are the contributors who find their first stories printed there. For Mute, however, far and away the best publication of the College is THE LAMP — for which the reason must be obvious. (He really is a vain little fellow!) Hours and hours of hard work and painstaking routine go into all of these publications, but the members of the staffs always say that in the obvious enjoyment of their fellow students they are well rewarded.

At 11:20 one morning, Mute saw everyone running and yelling so he started running too as fast as his little feet could carry him, because he was certain there must be a fire. What a surprise he got when he saw that it was only a lot of silly envelopes stuffed with sheets of white paper that all the commotion had been about. He soon found out that the Barn plays a big part in a Lasell girl's life—the place for a quick cigarette, a coke, and the letter from home.

Mute found all the assemblies at Lasell to be both entertaining and informative, and sometimes even managed to forget the hungry feeling in his stomach when some before-lunch-time program was particularly absorbing.

Going home for Thanksgiving was the first taste of the vacation spirit for Mute. Obviously, the vacation was too short to enable him to make a trip all the way to Muteland, but his roommate Clarbelle invited both him and Loo Bird to visit her home. The night before they left was very exciting: packing, cleaning up and holding "hen parties" were uppermost in every girl's mind, and not much thought was put on the half-day of classes still to be lived through the next day. Many good-byes were shouted the next afternoon when the students all went their separate ways. As excited as they all were to get home, they were equally anxious to get back to Lasell after the week-end was over to exchange the latest gossip, and discuss the newly pinned and engaged girls who appear after every vacation.

Executive Council Members

Student Government Officers

Mute was much impressed by the fact that the girls at Lasell had set up a student government all of their own to deal with their problems. He didn't particularly like it when he had to go to court that time he stayed in an unapproved hotel in Boston; but after all, it was the only hotel where they took Mutes, so what else could he have done? The executive council was very nice to him, and let him sit in a big chair right in the center of things, and after they had heard his story, they well understood his situation and excused him. He was a sensible little Mute most of the time however, and realized what a fine job the student government at Lasell was doing. The student government girls have a difficult and sometimes distasteful task to perform, but Mute noticed that they did it most tactfully, and always with a smile on their faces and understanding in their hearts.

Heads of Student Court

As we've said before, one of Mute's favorite pastimes at Lasell was sport. You see, there weren't any athletics up in Muteland, and games seemed to hold some sort of fascination for him when he first encountered them here. He was particularly impressed by the opening Athletic Assembly, when all the freshmen chose their blue or white button which indicated which team they would be on during their two years of college. The athletic officers were introduced to the student body, and their interest and enthusiasm in their respective sports seemed to reach out and take hold of every girl in the audience. The singing and cheers led by the cheerleaders brought out a tremendous response from the students.

L.C.C.A. Officers

Religion, in the best sense of the word, plays an important role in the lives of every Lasell girl. Mute discovered this at the first chapel service of the year, conducted entirely by the student members of L.C.C.A. But Lasell's religion is not merely a matter of services and meetings; it is also an intensely living and active spirit of helpfulness, as when, for instance, the girls dig deep into their pockets and their hearts to contribute what they can to the Blue Feather, which represents the united charities and the combined good works of the entire student body.

Blue Feather Chairman

One of the most worthwhile contributions to community life made by the College is its participation in the local Red Cross Blood Drive. Every girl realizes the gravity of the present world situation, and how much a pint of plasma can mean to some boy in Korea. The blood drive therefore is an inspiring sight at Lasell, and all who are able and have their parents' permission can donate a pint of this desperately needed life-giving fluid. It all happens on one day, but the valuable work of the Red Cross chapter of the College, under the capable direction of Miss Solimene, goes on throughout the year.

Red Cross Officers

Outing Club Officers

Mute had some of his finest hours at Lasell when he joined in the hikes and trips of the Outing Club. Camping out and roughing it appealed to his strenuous nature. He got to know many more of his fellow students this way, too, and he felt, as did all the girls, that he could completely relax when, with all his friends of the Club, he sat before the camp fire in some pleasant New England wood. He had never been on skis before, either, but the girls were so clever that they had him in a slalom race before he knew what had happened; he only twisted his ankle once. Nobody joins the Outing Club unless she thoroughly enjoys the outdoors and realizes what an opportunity it offers for good exhilarating recreation.

As an actor, Mute rated zero on the applause meter, but in Workshop Players, there is a job for everyone. All that is necessary is interest and initiative. Miss Wethern saw Mute's potentialities at once, and let him express his personality by sweeping the stage. Every Workshop Player puts in an enormous amount of time and hard work, but only one who has had his bow before an enthusiastic audience of his fellow students can explain about the rewards. Not least of the many opportunities to know about the stage offered to the students by the Workshop Players are the Theatre Parties held in Boston several times during the school year. Mute and the girls saw many plays and musicals in the city, and had the chance to admire some of the finest performers of our time.

Workshops Player Officers

Modern Dance Club Officers

Grace and rhythm are the fundamentals of modern dance. This was the first thing that Mute had to learn in his modern dance class. Personally, he seemed to have neither, but he enjoyed trying, and—like all the girls—he adored his effervescent instructor, Mrs. Cousins, referred to everywhere by her student friends as “Mrs. C.” Mute was a little better, it is necessary to report, in ballet and tap. The Modern Dance Club is made up of about fifteen members all equally interested in this particular art form. Under Mrs. C’s competent direction they learned how best to express their emotions through the dance. At the year’s end, the June Fete was the thrilling climax for all who had practised so hard during the year, and everybody agreed that the dancers had a big share in making it a success.

French Club Officers

Spanish Club

Since Mute was a student of languages he was an active member of both language clubs. The Spanish Club held meetings regularly. They were entertained with a technicolor film on South America, and presented a Spanish play during the year. Senora Cobb, faculty advisor for the club, was a helpful and understanding guide.

Spanish Club Officers

French Club

The French Club held their meetings about once a month at Madame Bailly's house. At the Christmas party the French III students put on a very entertaining play. All the French movies that played locally were always eagerly attended throughout the year.

The Speakers' Bureau, headed by Mrs. Fuller, is composed of all the students enrolled in Speech. Mute found the movies and lectures he attended at club meetings most entertaining. Speakers' Bureau members introduce the various assembly and chapel guests throughout the school year. Before the first quarter was over, Mrs. Fuller, with her characteristic patience and skill, had made a big dent in Mute's shyness and loss of words in front of an audience. By the end of the semester Mute, uninvited, gave an hour and a half lecture on Muteland politics and had to be chased from the platform with a broom. Mrs. Fuller has done a magnificent job in giving her students the confidence and the poise for effective public speaking and for easy and natural private conversation.

Miss Beede and Mute had a little understanding concerning the Orphean Club. Actually, Mute can't carry a tune in a bucket, but he loved music so much that Miss Beede let him join the club on a special, no-vocal basis. He went to all the rehearsals just to sit and listen. He delighted in the cheerful, energetic direction of Mr. Dunham, and never let an opportunity go by of telling him what an inspiration it was to watch him in action. The first big concert of the year with Bowdoin's Glee Club was Mute's pride and joy and he gloried in every song that was sung. Lasell is proud of its Choir, too, which does such an important and satisfying job in supplying all the religious music for the chapel and vesper services.

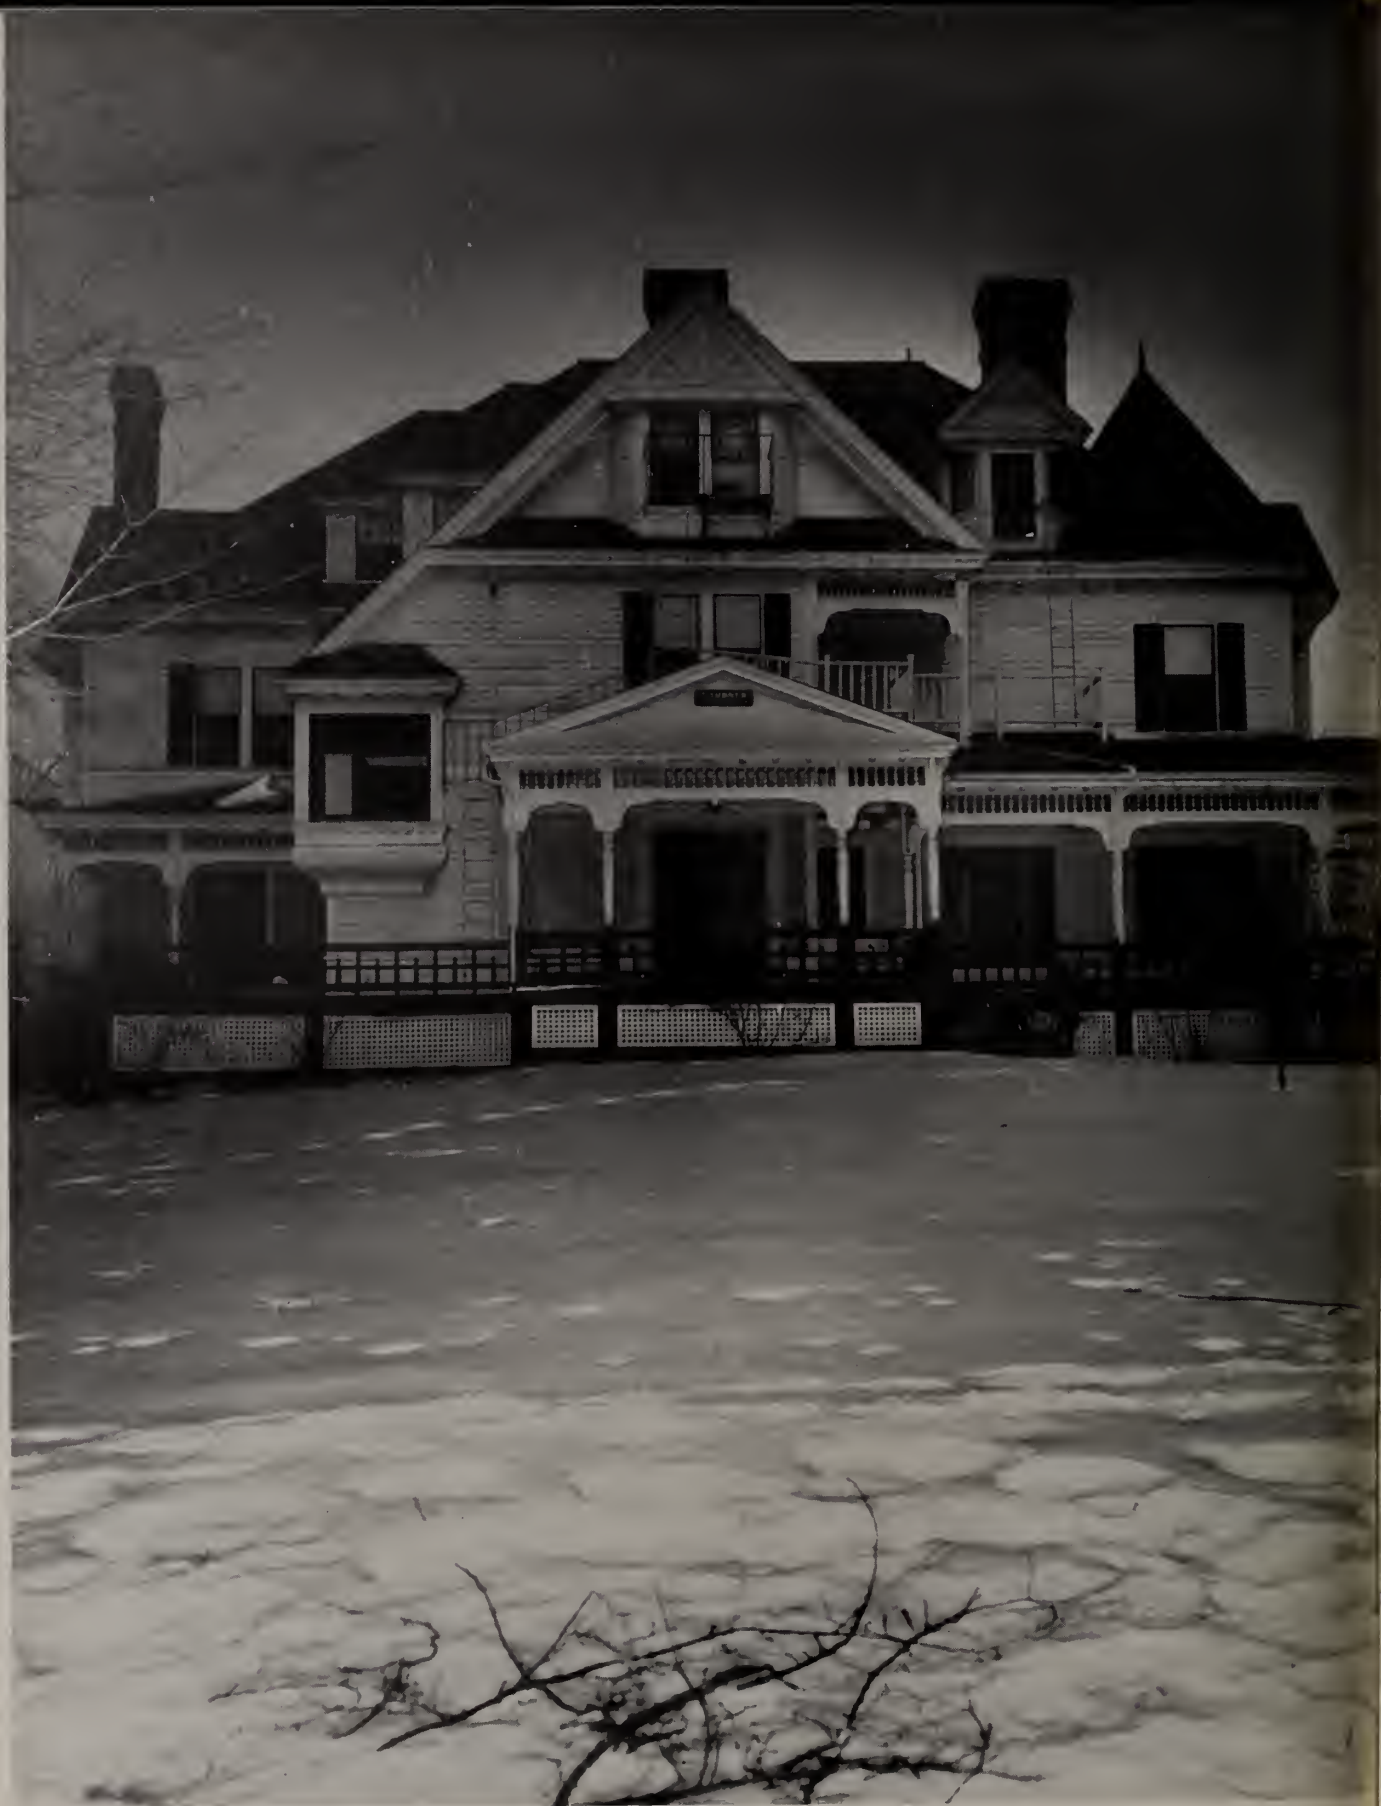

Lasell has a great variety of sports activities which are carried on throughout the school year. Mute had the same spirit as all the rest of the students at Lasell, and even if he didn't have any talent for the different athletics he went out for the teams and tried his hardest. He and Loo Bird did very well in basketball. Mute made more baskets than anyone on his team because Loo Bird would always fly up and give the ball a little push into the basket. It added to the interest of the game, he felt. But in archery and tennis, even with the aid of Loo Bird, Mute didn't do too well; they had great fun at it anyway. In the spring, many students flock to the tennis court to spend a pleasant afternoon. Mute was no exception, for he also loved to be out-of-doors during the springtime in New England.

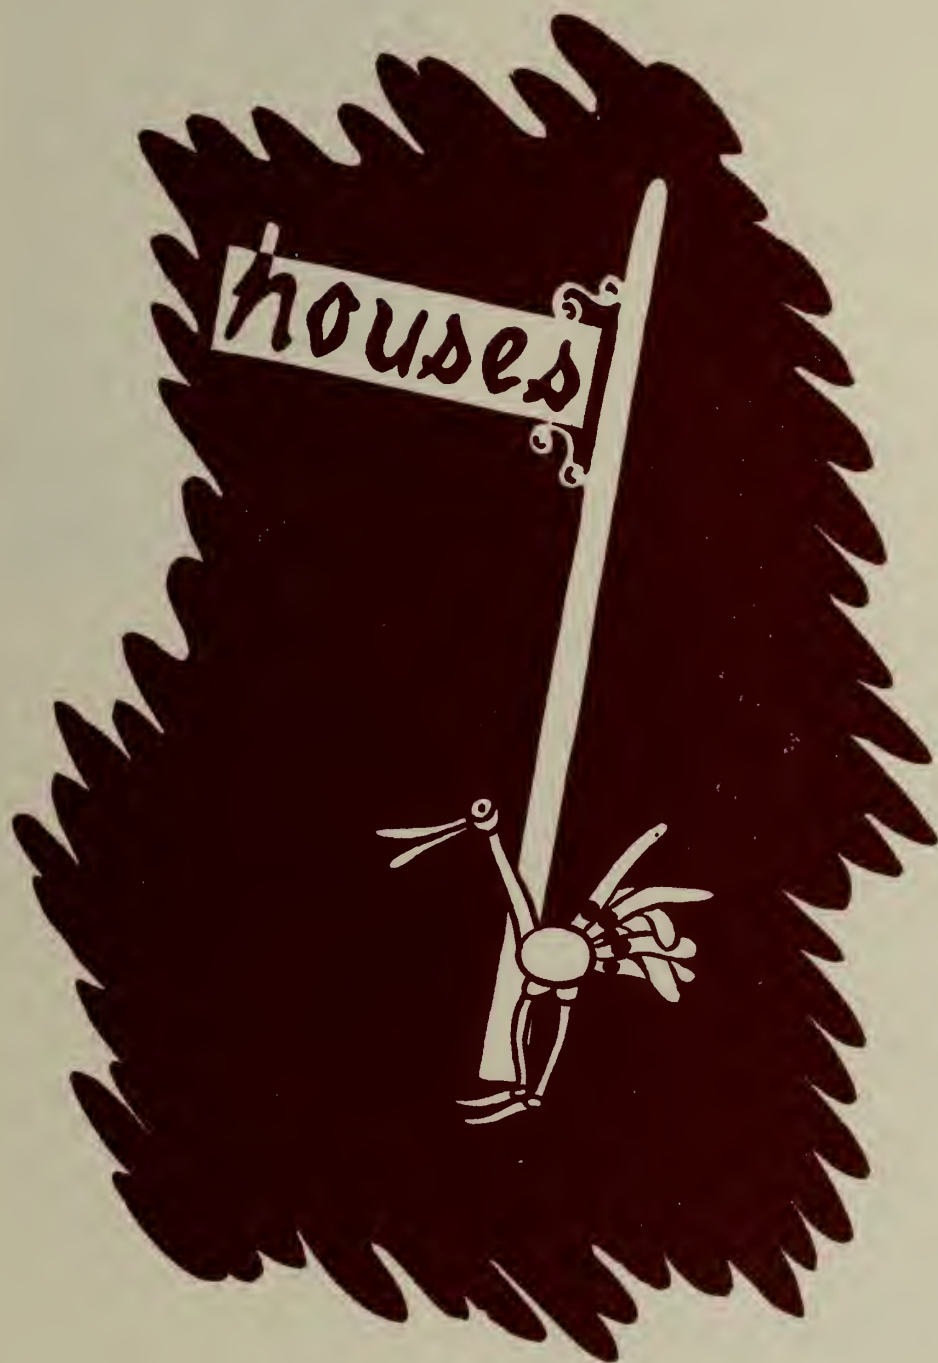

As we've said before, Mute loved all the sports offered at Lasell. He enjoyed the soccer games and got to know Miss Tribou quite well during the soccer season. He soon was calling her Miss "Tri," just as all the girls did. After the fall season and soccer were over, Mute then became acquainted with Miss Watt, for he participated in volleyball and baseball games during the year. These sports were Mute's biggest enjoyment while at Lasell and he kept saying to himself, "Wait till I teach all my friends back in Muteland these games! I'll be the most popular Mute of all."

Queens

"Thank you for inviting me to participate in the selection of your beauty queens. I have chosen the lovely Siamese girl, Molly Snitwongse, as one and the beautiful blonde, Charlotte Nilson Carder, as the other."

Sincerely,
Bud Collyer

Blaisdell was the first senior house that Mute had the privilege of spending a week in. To explain, Mute decided he'd like to get to know all the students on campus, so he figured the best way to accomplish this would be to live in each house or dormitory at least a week. As a result, Mute took his little suitcase and trotted off to Blaisdell one sunny afternoon. Walking in the front door, he was greeted with a delicious odor coming from the kitchen. He was soon made aware of the fact that Blaisdell is both a senior house and the college practice house. The girls of the Home Management class spend six weeks at Blaisdell cooking all their meals and tempting the resident girls with their out-put.

From Blaisdell, Mute moved on to another of the smaller senior houses, Briggs. As he walked into the kitchen, he found one of the girls at the tedious job of trying to teach the other girls in the house to play bridge. By the time Mute's week at Briggs was up, the entire house was playing contract, including Loo Bird. Mute saw why Briggs girls were well known for their long discussions way into the night.

Briggs

Leaving the smaller houses, Mute decided to visit one of the two largest houses on campus. Carpenter was the big yellow house right in the center of the Lasell community that Mute had admired so much during the year. With its circular driveway and spreading lawn it attracted everyone's attention immediately. It seemed to welcome any student who happened to be passing by to come in and chat awhile. As Mute walked up onto the porch, he noticed that Carpenter was the only house with an outside smoker. The girls were sitting enjoying the sun while having a cigarette and playing a hand or two of bridge. The girls were so friendly to Mute and Loo Bird that both of them felt right at home in no time. Mute was impressed by the pride and enthusiasm with which the girls showed him through Carpenter, pointing out the improvements they had made during the year, such as the decoration of the indoor smoker and the kitchen and the new living room draperies they had made themselves. The first thaw always finds Carpenter's driveway lined with convertibles and happy young couples enjoying the advent of the New England spring. Mute sensed a warm feeling of unity and loyalty among the girls living in Carpenter; or, as their song states, "Twenty-six girls are bound together . . . You're the best of all, Carpenter Hall!"

Mute's travels now took him way down Woodland Road to the large building called Casino. The Casino, otherwise known for its many secretarial classrooms, this year housed a group of seniors who were a fun-loving set. They welcomed Mute with open arms. Mute loved his stay at Casino and he spent many hours getting acquainted with the girls there. Here at Casino, he got his first taste of television. The girls were lucky enough to have a very generous father among their parents, who gave their house a T.V. set, for which they were the envy of the campus.

Mute thought he'd now travel back to a few more of the smaller senior houses. Chandler was the next to be honored with his presence and the girls received him with the same pleasure and friendliness as all the other houses. Mute liked the nights at Chandler when he, the girls, and their housemother, Miss "Tri," would gather in the kitchen for a late snack and a long chat. Many people admire the pretty little white house that seems to nestle so warmly on Maple Street, and in the hearts of every Chandler girl.

After Mute's week at Chandler was over, he decided to make his next stop at Conn, the smallest house on Campus. Mute had never seen such a closely knit group of girls before, as the seniors that were living in Conn house. Everything was done in a group and no one was left out, including their well-loved housemother, Miss Aulisi. Mute was so glad that he had finally learned to play bridge because the Conn girls' favorite relaxation was a game in the smoker and an old-time "gab fest." Many suppers were cooked in Conn's little kitchen and, needless to say, Mute enjoyed that most of all.

Cushing was the next house on the list for Mute's visit. As he opened Cushing's door he heard the phone ring; and he still swears it's the most frequently used phone on Campus. The girls in the house decided the best place to put Mute while he was staying with them was in the spacious first floor triple. The Cushing girls could almost always be found sitting around the piano, singing their hearts out. This was indeed a heartwarming sight to Mute because it seemed to bring the girls closer together. Playing bridge and getting the best use out of the kitchen seemed to be a favorite pastime in this house, too. Good times were always being planned in Cushing, and Mute only wished that he could have stayed longer so that he, too, could have joined in on the many plans.

Draper

The next week Mute took a little jaunt up to the end of Hawthorne Avenue where he opened Draper's door only to be welcomed by the steady click of typewriters and everyone buzzing about the Lamp. For here in Draper house, much of this yearbook came to be. The girls gave up much of their private lives to long editorial discussions and to pounding out copy on their typewriters. Mute was delighted to find his old friend Miss Watt as housemother at Draper and he well understood why the girls were so fond of their house. Such fun was to be had at Draper that Mute rather hated leaving this house, but his time had run out.

Mute only had to take a few steps down the street to find himself at Hawthorne. Here he found a group of fun-loving, carefree girls that he learned to like in no time. Each one of the girls in Hawthorne had a personality all her own and Mute loved everyone of them. The smoker was always filled with singing, laughing girls and they seemed to have no end of fun. The weekends were always filled with chatter about trips to Tufts, Babson, and the like. Dancing feet often disturbed the quiet hall at any hour, for the Modern Dance Club was well represented in Hawthorne. Truly there was never a dull moment at Hawthorne house and Mute was sad when he had to leave its laughter-filled chaos.

Gardner

Gardner had always been an impressive sight to Mute, for it sat up on its hill like a king on his throne; and he was a little leery as he entered its massive doors. But these fears were soon dispelled when the ring of laughter reached his ears and one of the girls welcomed him into the crowd. Gardner made its own contribution to Mute's education by teaching him to play "cops and robbers." He had a great time in Gardner but there were two things that got on his nerves: the constant ringing of the telephone on the second floor, and the invisible squirrels in the rafters.

After leaving the confusion and excitement of Gardner, Mute was rather tired but he traveled on to his last senior house, Pickard. Things here seemed quiet and serene, but there was certainly no lack of the little excitements that add so much to the pleasures of college campus life. Mute was greeted in a cordial and friendly manner by each girl in the house including Miss Saunders, with whom he enjoyed many long talks. At first, Mute thought he was seeing double but he finally realized that he had met a set of twins (something he had never encountered before.) The thing Mute found most fascinating in Pickard was the peculiar collection of bottles that seemed to turn the girls hair shades darker or lighter over night. Mute enjoyed his Pickard stay and wished the week could have been longer.

Mute heard a strange word one day while sitting in the Barn. The girls kept referring to creatures called "dayhops." Finally he decided he'd go down to the lower level of the Barn and find out just what these "dayhops" looked like. When he walked down the stairs, some girl grabbed him by the arm and started jigging around the juke box with him. He found out later that he had jitterbugged. When he sat and talked to these "dayhops," he realized that they were just like other girls. The day students are an important part of Lasell's life and many lasting friendships have been made between resident students and dayhops. Many day students have even lived on campus during the winter months when the weather makes commuting difficult. After that first day, Mute often went to the Barn to visit the dayhops and they were always coming up to his dorm. He often said he could never forget their friendliness.

Day Hops

After Mute had lived as a freshman during the first half of the school year, he reminded us that the freshman year is just as important as the senior. Finally he persuaded us that it definitely deserved a section in our yearbook, and here it is, just for the freshmen. By far the Freshman Acquaintance dance was the most interesting one for Mute because it was the first dance held after his arrival at Lasell. Mute served refreshments that night and had a gay time for himself listening to the music and watching the boys and girls dance. Freshman Stunt Night gave many laughs to all.

Senior counseling was a new attempt this year, designed to make the freshmen feel at home and to know that they always had someone they could bring their problems to. We think it was a great success.

Having completed his tour of the senior houses, Mute's tired little feet carried him on to Clark cottage. For many years, Clark had been a senior house but this year it housed a group of freshmen who truly loved their life in a house as opposed to that in a dormitory. Mute found much sophisticated merriment in Clark and soon felt a part of the group. Love for her housemother and loyalty to her house seemed to fill every Clark girl's heart. Busy week-ends and frequent trips to Boston made the year in Clark pass much too swiftly.

Clark

Woodland

A distinctly different type of life, but still with the same friendliness and warmth, awaited Mute's arrival at Woodland Hall. This beautiful new freshman dormitory has most recently been the pride and joy of many a Lasell student. Mute found it to be quite a task to attempt to get to know every girl there within one short week, but he did the best he could, and the girls themselves were all very helpful. Mute enjoyed the singing in the smoker and the midnight snacks, but more than anything else he liked the idea of just having one flight of stairs between him and breakfast when he got up in the morning.

Bragdon

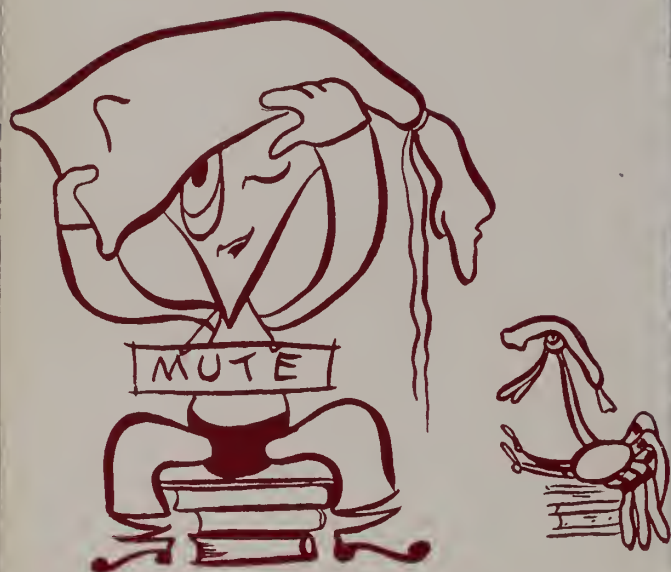

Worn out from his travels, Mute was glad to be back in his own room again at Bragdon Hall. His friends all welcomed him back enthusiastically and kept him up all night with questions about his experiences in the other houses. He didn't mind at all, however, because he was just bursting to tell everyone about the wonderful girls he'd met and how he had definitely decided he would like nothing better than to be Lasell's mascot. The girls all cheered him and sang a song or two when he told them of his final decision. Then they left him and Loo Bird in peace to get a good night's sleep.

But tired as Mute was, he couldn't go to sleep that night for he had started thinking of all the wonderful times he had had in Bragdon Hall. The nightly meetings in their newly-decorated smoker, the long "hen-parties" in the girls' rooms and the unity among the residents of Bragdon had all made Mute feel so much a part of Lasell. The persistent jangle of the telephone, the constant stream of cars up Bragdon hill and the familiar call, "Does anybody want a date?" had never left a Bragdon girl feeling bored or tired by monotonous days. Bragdon symbolizes the fine tradition of Lasell and the devotion of a century of Lasell girls. The familiar song goes, "In June we'll leave you, Seniors then we'll be; we'll for e'er be true . . ." Bragdon is truly the heart of Lasell; thousands of students can't be wrong!

"Cheer up, Freshmen, the worst is yet to come!" This was the familiar cry that rang in every freshman's ear during the dreaded two days known as Freshman Daze. It all started with a mysterious assembly, and for one whole day the lowly freshmen were seen in get-ups that otherwise they wouldn't have been caught dead in. But a sense of humor carried Mute and his fellow freshmen through the day and they really didn't mind it at all. The Freshman Picnic is another fun-filled event that remains in the heart of every Lasell student.

Mute was a little wary about his first college classes and we all must admit they are a bit perplexing and confusing for the first week or so. After that, though, Mute fell into the swing of things along with his freshmen friends and learned to take classes as a matter of course. He heard a few of the girls remarking how different they were from the high school classes they had been used to for the past four years. The classes at Lasell are smaller, so that each student has the opportunity for individual attention, and for the same reason they are considerably longer. Mute fully appreciated the advantages of his first taste of the higher learning.

"To thee Lasell our voices swell, the time has come to part. With heads held high we bid good-bye, with sadness in our hearts. You gave each one with work and fun things we shall ne'er forget . . ."

The Freshman Prom is one of, if not THE, biggest event in the first year student's life. Mute was again found serving refreshments, because he was really happiest doing this. (Besides, where can a Mute find a date on earth?) He and Loo Bird were fascinated by the gay decorations, the pretty spring formal dresses, and the overall merriment of the dancing couples. It is indeed a big weekend for fun, dancing, and sharing with that special man your Freshman Prom.

Snowball impressed little Mute with its glitter of white, silver and blue. It seemed just like a magical winter-wonderland.

The Senior Prom with its theme of a Circus was wonderfully exciting and Mute thought it was one of the loveliest dances he had attended.

Spring was here and the familiar phrase, "Str-r-oke back" was heard echoing along the banks of the Charles River every afternoon after classes. Yes, crew season was finally here and the teams were practising for La-sell's big annual River Day. This was by far, one of the finest days of the school year. Classes were over at noontime and everyone, students and faculty alike, put on their old clothes and trooped down to the bank of the river to cheer on their favorite teams. After much laughter and a few tears, the entire student body enjoyed a picnic on the athletic field, followed by the unforgettable Stunt Night produced by groups of both students and instructors. Mute, a member of one of the crews, noticed that the thrills and the excitement of the day were shared equally by the onlookers and the crews themselves.

Mute was again found serving refreshments at the May Cotillion, because this seemed to be where he was most useful. The May Cotillion was the biggest formal week-end of the year, especially in connection with the Pops concert held in Symphony Hall in Boston the night before. Mute was a privileged character and sat at a table downstairs in the Hall that night with the seniors and their guests (and drank champagne).

Another big day at Lasell for Mute and everyone else was June Fete. As a member of the Modern Dance classes, he even had a small part in it. The Modern Dance Club members took the leads, naturally, but weeks of rehearsals, property and costume making, and all-around hard work were put in by everyone. Mrs. Cousins helped in making this work seem like fun, however, and the response given by the audience at the production was rewarding in itself. The Fete, as is the custom, was given on the athletic field and Mute had never seen so many people at one time in his little life before . . . and they all loved it.

Mute's visit at Lasell came at last to an end. He realized it the day he watched the seniors in their caps and gowns solemnly step up one by one to receive their diplomas. So many exciting things had happened during the Commencement week-end that each girl hadn't fully realized until this moment that the doors of her college life were closing, never to be opened again except through memories. Class Night, the Torchlight Parade, the Senior Banquet, Baccalaureate, and finally Commencement were still fresh in their minds, but they would soon be pushed aside by the thoughts of the coming years.

We only hope that this book will do its small part in bringing back to you many fond memories of your days spent at Lasell Junior College.
